I. Catalog Statement

Journalism 116 continues to develop the process of gathering, writing, editing, and presenting the news on radio and television. This course involves practical application of the skills. Students produce, report, and anchor a news segment for cable broadcast. In addition, they will produce and host a half-hour magazine format show for cable broadcast. Emphasis is placed on writing for broadcast, news judgment, visual versus sound considerations, interviewing techniques, ethics, scripting, and news organizations' infrastructure. Students will also be introduced to various radio formats and perform on the campus radio station.
