FACULTY APPLICATION PACKET FOR STUDY ABROAD

Teaching in the Study Abroad Program

As a faculty member in the Study Abroad program, you will be privileged to share your knowledge with students in a location outside of the United States that will enhance the subjects you teach. This carries great joy but also great responsibility. Below, you will find some general comments on issues faculty raise (or should raise) before embarking on such an adventure.

1. What are my teaching responsibilities while abroad? You must meet all intellectual and time requirements of the course as taught on campus in addition to including local opportunities to enhance student learning.

2. Other than teaching, what must I do? You must attend all field experiences and excursions which are listed as part of the program, assist the faculty director when needed in all aspects of the program, and contribute to maintaining a healthy psychological and pedagogical atmosphere within the group. You must help coordinate class times and excursions with your program director and tour operator, and assist with program logistics on all levels. Daily meetings with the program director and the tour operator representative are recommended to help ensure program cohesion and increase communication on all levels. Assisting with the management of student conflicts and student health issues are also the responsibility if the program faculty. Regular communication with the Study Abroad Director is necessary for all issues of potential concern.

3. What are my responsibilities before leaving? In one word: RECRUIT! Actually, you must work cooperatively with all your colleagues in the study abroad program to make the program a success. In particular, you are expected to make personal visitations to as many classes as possible, host slide shows and orientation sessions, and be available to meet with interested students in order to make a successful program.

4. What do I get for all of the above? Your teaching salary, an expense-paid trip and an unforgettable life experience!

5. How do I get paid? You will receive your compensation as you would if you were to teach your course(s) on campus during the same session. For more specifics, please check with your division chairperson.

6. Who approves my application to teach abroad? You must obtain the approval of your division for your participation and the courses you want to teach (see last page). Each division has their own process for their faculty and you division chair must sign off on it. After that it is presented for approval first to the study abroad committee and then to academic affairs. The final approval is up to the administration.

7. I want to apply, where do I begin? Your first step is to informally meet with the study abroad director to go over your plans, timetable and other requirements. Once the application is completed by you and the director feels it is ready, it is presented to the study abroad committee. You will have a chance to personally explain it at a formal meeting of the committee.

I have read the above and agree to abide by the stated conditions
